

Who can see my health record?

Who can see my health record?

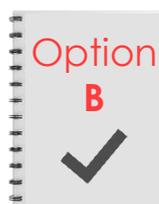

To treat you safely and well, it is important that professionals you see can access your health record.

Only by letting your GP surgery know it is ok, will your notes be available to be seen by other professionals such as hospital clinicians, paramedics or district nurses.

How do I make my record available to health professionals?

Simple. Complete this form and hand it into your GP surgery. There are 2 ways that this sharing can happen and it's important you understand what they are so you can make the right decision for you.

How do I make my record available to health professionals?

A. Summary Care Record with Additional Information

A Summary Care Record has basic information on that is useful for NHS clinicians.

It shows if you have allergies and it lists your medications.

98% of people have this.

Additional Information

By including “Additional Information”, this will add a summary of your medical history, and useful information such as languages spoken and information about carers.

How do I make my record available to health professionals?

B. Full Electronic Health Record

Your full electronic health record is held by your GP surgery.

It can also be made available to health and social care staff, if they are involved in your direct care.

Staff must still ask for your permission before they look at your record. This also allows your surgery to see what other staff are doing to support and treat you.

If there are some parts of your record that you want to keep private, your surgery can do this.

Does this mean anyone can just look at my record?

No. Your record can only be seen by staff who are currently involved in your direct care, have a need to see it, and have asked for your permission.

Are you going to sell the information in my record?

Never. If your record is shared, it's only ever available to staff for the purposes of your care, nothing else.

Can I change my mind?

Yes. Just tell your surgery and they can update your decision at any time.
